Musical Chairs

Musical chairs can be trying for everyone - participating children and their parents. During each round, the adults saddled up to the Fun House bar for some liquor. Each round all the parents had the same type of liquor, but they picked a different liquor in every round. The bottles were numerous, so there were plenty to pick from.

- Three boys and three girls played musical chairs. Jessica ultimately won the game as the parents drank top shelf liquor.
- The parent that selected the third round's liquor was a real nerd: She annoyed the bartender by asking for the bottle whose position on its shelf was the 4th prime number.
- Michael found a chair in at least one round but got out before Christabella, who was out before Frederick.
- While watching at least one round, the parents drank the ninth bottle from one shelf.
- During the opening round, one woman watched her daughter Fiona play musical chairs as she drank liquor from the top shelf's second bottle.
- The parents selected the same bottle number in the second and fifth rounds. This was the only duplicate number selected.
- The parents refused to slum with well liquor: They drank middle shelf liquor during the second and third rounds, as well as at least one other round.
- Nathaniel Joseph couldn't find a chair in the fourth round. The parents did not drink liquor from the ninth bottle of any shelf during this round.
- During one round, the parents drank the same number bottle as the round of musical chairs. (Another way of thinking about this: During round X, the parents drank bottle number X.)
