The visitors* to the park that day (all pictured on the next page) each had a number of issues they wanted to talk about, safely of course. Then all of a sudden, a strong gust blew all their protective face coverings off their faces and onto the bottom of this page! As they scrambled to find them and put them back on, one person was overheard to say: “They can put a man on the moon; why can’t they invent an adhesive to hold these darn things in place!?”

*Please note: these visitors are purely fictional: any resemblance of these characters to actual people, living or dead, is purely coincidental and has nothing to do with the solving of this puzzle!
