

The professor has been offered a once-in-a-lifetime tour of the catacombs underneath the cathedral, which houses numerous crypts. He wants to visit every crypt and doesn't have time to backtrack to crypts that he has already visited. Once he's found a good path through the catacombs, though, the local guide pointed out he'll have to be observant about identifying the occupants of the crypts. There are a number of torches in each crypt, but they only provide enough light for both the current crypt and the next crypt. It's very dusty down there, and the thought of the catacombs is enough to make him sick...
