THE WARLOCKS

The band plays a song from their early days, when they were known as The Warlocks. Six spinning dancers make a point of moving in paths towards a common center, their paths dictated by the strength of each hexagonal vortex – with the strength indicating the number of sides that the dancer traverses.

As each dancer moves – never crossing their own paths – they pick up crystals that they find directly in their path. When they arrive at the center, each strikes a unique pose. You wonder what powers feed this strange ritual.
