

Holmes and I next visited the twin nephews, whom we found engaged in a quarrel over access to a full-length mirror. Percy stammered, "Paul, I need to finish my grooming. First you beat me at Gin by cheating, and now you selfishly dominate the only mirror in our room."

I thought to myself, it must be unnerving to look at one's twin and constantly see your mirror reflection on the outside, but know that they are actually your total opposite, the reverse of you.

As the suspicious duo answered Holmes's questions, I wondered which answers were factually accurate and which had not the least intersection with the truth.

H T E

M E R

R F S

K K S

B O E

O N E

B E E

G L E

G R E

G H T

D E R

D T T

A R O

A G A

B L E

T E R

E R N

P R O

Bleach, perhaps

French bread made with heavy use of eggs, milk and butter

Give credence to

Like some chicken breasts

Olympic athlete who may compete in individual, relay or mixed medley events

Openings to some books

Tea variety named for an English nobleman (2 wds.)

Searched online, perhaps

Smelly members of the animal kingdom

A place for socks or silverware

Adds "sir," in a way

Explore casually

Hairspray, often

It comes at the end of most works of literature

Person who perseveres against adversity

Site of a famed American/Canadian waterfall

"...this recording will self-_____ in 5 seconds..."

Unending